If you are including any material not copyrighted by you or any authors in collaboration on the manuscript, you need to get releases/permission from the copyright holder and to submit the signed forms with your publication agreement. This is both relevant and important so that MIT Press and Neural Computation may refer any requests to the appropriate rights holder, and so that it is noted in our databases. Also, if any illustration(s) are your own, and you wish to give MIT Press only one-time publication rights for it, you need to indicate this on your publication agreement so that we will not license any re-use of the illustration outside the context of the article as a whole. Otherwise, its reuse will only be limited by your publication agreement.

Please note: The Author is responsible for providing publication information to Pub Med Central. Neither Neural Computation or MIT Press is responsible for this information.
